

The effects of endocrine disrupting chemicals on male reproductive health in humans and animals

Reproductive toxicology protocols can be used to confirm findings in the screening assays or as stand alone tests for endocrine disruptive tests. A health risk assessment should also be included in environmental projects regarding endocrine disruption, as this field is relatively new and very little information has been published on South African conditions to date.